

Serena HY Lo, MD

Geriatrician, Kaiser Permanente Hawaii

Dr. Serena Lo was born and raised in Honolulu, Hawaii. Because she loved science and helping people, a career in medicine seemed like a natural fit for her. In her specialty of geriatrics, she finds it particularly gratifying when she can help patients and their families through illness and sometimes very difficult medical decision making. After completing her medical degree at the University of Hawaii John A. Burns School of Medicine, she completed internship and residency training at Virginia Mason Medical Center in Seattle, Washington. She completed a fellowship in geriatric medicine at the University of Washington School of Medicine, and a fellowship in advanced geriatrics at the VA Puget Sound Health Care System in Seattle. She is board certified in Internal Medicine and Geriatric Medicine.

Dr. Lo loves the camaraderie at the Hawaii Permanente Medical Group. She feels very comfortable discussing patient issues with other physicians and working together with the common goal of providing high quality medical care. Her goal is to work closely with patients and their families to provide the best care possible. Everyone has a story to tell, and she really enjoys hearing her patients' stories, past and present, which helps her to understand them as a whole person. She is a member of the American College of Physicians and the American Geriatrics Society. She also serves as Clinical Assistant Professor in the Department of Geriatric Medicine at the University of Hawaii John A. Burns School of Medicine.
